

Detective,

I got your email a few days ago and decided to look you up in the city directory. I figured they added you since you have worked on every significant case in our city over the past few years. I'm not a big fan of emails and wanted to send you information I recently found. I figured local detectives might not take me seriously because I am a suspect in the recent missing person cases.

It has been killing me that I can't figure out more about the other two properties Dick owns. I have gone to great lengths to dig up more information. I spent a considerable amount of time staking out each location, half expecting to discover the missing residents. I went through every microfilm of archived newspapers the library had. I also searched the internet using every search engine out there. Yet, with all that, I still came up empty-handed.

You will never guess where I found this little gem. So let me tell you. I was in the waiting room at my OBGYN, and no, I am not pregnant. It was a routine check-up. I was thumbing through an old copy of a local "Mom and Me" magazine when I saw this ad. The magazine was dated January 2019, and it was the address on the ad that caught my eye.

I made a copy for you and will be keeping the original. I have no idea what it means. To be honest, it makes no sense to me at all. I hope you can make something out of it.
